5. The Four-way Test

Two Board Members of the Newcastle Historical Society, Russ Segner and Steve Williams will share the incredible history and industry of Newcastle, with a special emphasis on the Coal Creek and May Creek railroad-grade trails. By the late 1890s, the Pacific Coast Coal Company elevated Newcastle to a community second in size only to Seattle. After a miners' strike, the company left Newcastle, site of last working mine in the region; and many residents moved to Renton. Today, one can spot remnants of mining days along trails in Newcastle; and also visit one of the oldest cemeteries in King County, the last resting place of the immigrants who helped bring the coal from the ground.
