Creating Fun in Your Business During Challenging COVID Times

The Seattle Chinese Post is the oldest and largest Chinese-language newspaper in the Northwest.

The Northwest Asian Weekly is the only Pan-Asian Weekly in English in the Greater Seattle area. It aims to inspire, engage, inform, and empower the community. It promotes multiculturalism, diversity, leadership, and community-building. It is a voice for the Asian Americans and a bridge between the mainstream and Asian communities.

Since 1984, the Asian Weekly/Chinese Post have received over 100 (international, national, and local) awards, including community service and journalism awards from the Society of Professional Journalists and Washington Publishers Association.

Assunta Ng personally has received several awards from Seattle University School of Law, UW School of Business and others, and the Puget Sound Business Journal Women of Influence Award.

Born in China and raised in Hong Kong, Assunta Ng founded the Seattle Chinese Post and Northwest Asian Weekly,

"To be a journalist. We get very little in return. For the type of commitment and energy that you must put into the work, you can make 10 times more in another field," she said. "But you have to realize, you are fulfilling a very special role."
