President Jay Davis was away, so former president Kathy Coyle led the meeting. She asked Linda Tinney to lead us in the Pledge of Allegiance, after which the Songsters led us in singing This Land is Your Land. Alan Burnham gave the Thought for the Day.

There were no visiting Rotarians, but several guests of Rotarians: Lawrence Kohl of the Pacific Chamber Orchestra, and Cal Wood, a board member for the Pacific Chamber Orchestra, were introduced by Sonya Sheffield. Our new exchange student, Elisa Delinci from Belgium was introduced by Paul Evonne Hopkins introduced our speaker, Yoshiko Kanazawa, who was held in a Japanese intern-ment camp for three and a half years during World War II. Ms Kanazawa has a bachelors degree from UCLA and a Masters of Education from the University of Illinois, and after many years of silence about the camp, she has decided to speak about her experiences so that it will never happen again.

Prior to WW II, the Japanese government's tremendous need for oil and metal was being stymied by the United States. Japanese military leaders decided on a pre-emptive strike at Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941. That attack caused the deaths of 2,400 American military as well as 68 civilians.

As a consequence, many newspapers and politicians pressured president Roosevelt to remove all people of Japanese ancestry fearing that they might be spies or saboteurs.

There were two groups of Japanese in the US, Issei, who were born in Japan but immigrated to the United States, and Nissei, who were the children and grandchildren of Issei and were United States citizens. All people of Japanese ancestry, especially those near the West Coast, were rounded up quickly and sent to temporary camps in Washington, Oregon, California, Hawaii and parts of Arizona and Alaska. Some 110,000 people were forcibly moved. They each wore a tag with a family- issued identification number, and they could take only a few belongings that they could carry. They had to sell off or leave all other property. They lived in temporary camps in places such as Fresno, Sacramento and Stockton. Ms Kanazawa was a child at the time and her family were removed from the Santa Clara Valley where they lived and sent to a camp in Arizona. They were given a list of items that were permissible to bring, and they traveled by train or bus guarded by armed soldiers. Cameras were not allowed, and they were all given small pox and typhoid vaccinations.

Over the years in the camps, the residents rigged together hospitals, schools, musical groups and even a newspaper. They had Catholic, Buddhist and Christian services.

They managed to endure with the help of three Japanese concepts:

Gaman -- perseverance with patience.

Gambare -- Hang in there

Shikataganai -- The situation cant be helped so make the best of it.

Trouble ensued when all adults were asked to sign two statements; one that they would serve in the US armed forces wherever they were sent, and two, that they would foreswear allegiance to the Japanese emperor and pledge total allegiance to the US. Adults who said no to both statements were sent to a maximum security facility.

Many people of Japanese ancestry did serve in the US military as translators, regular soldiers or in the famous Unit 442. At the end of 1945 the camps were closed and each individual was given $25.00 and a train ticket to any destination in the US. In 1988 Congress mailed each former detainee a letter of apology and $20,000 tax free. The Federal Appeals Court for the Ninth Circuit ruled that the internment was unconstitutional.

Yoshiko Kanazawa concluded her talk to a standing ovation. She suggested that we may wish to visit the Japanese-American Museum on 5th Street in Japantown, San Jose.

Next week, Alan Frank will present a program on 150 Years of Livermore and the Railroad.
