Capitol Facelift Nears Completion

By Richard Telthorst on Wednesday, October 7, 2020

Breakfast Club members learned last week that the 30-month, $30 million restoration of the State Capitol is nearing completion, with the project set to be wrapped up next month. Michael Outami, project manager for the Missouri Office of Administration; and Bill Ahal, president of Ahal Preconstruction Services; briefed club members on the details of the once-in-a-lifetime restoration of the century-old building.

The project to protect and preserve the historic aspects of the building's exterior is being funded by state revenue bonds authorized by the legislature in 2016. Work began in March of 2018. After completion of the project by year's end, the Capitol's exterior should be serviceable for another 50 to 100 years. The project is the largest restoration effort on the building since it was constructed.

Although only approximately six percent of the exterior stone was replaced, the process was expensive and time-consuming. Using drones and inspectors who rappelled down the walls, stones in need of replacement and repair were identified. Each stone was numbered and the condition inventoried. Engineers looked to match the Carthage marble (actually a limestone material) used in the original construction as closely as they could. They found a good replacement in a quarry north of Springfield, where large slabs were cut vertically and sent to be individually fabricated at a facility in Chicago.

The restoration project also involved many so-called "dutchman" repairs in which the face of a damaged stone was taken off and a replacement facade was mortared and screwed into place on the base of the old stone. So that workers could clean stone and set mortar year-round, the scaffolding that surrounded the entire building was wrapped in plastic sheeting to allow the space to be heated and cooled.

Other aspects of the project involved replacing terrace and sidewalk pavers, repairs to the flashing and copper roof, and an extensive cleaning of the goddess Ceres statue on top of the Capitol which had been stuck by lighting more than 300 times during its nearly 90 years over the dome.

Pioneer Trails Students Pen Thanks to Club

By Richard Telthorst on Wednesday, October 7, 2020

With sincere thanks and creative but enthusiastic spelling, several students at Pioneer Trails Elementary sent their thanks this week for the water bottles recently contributed by the Breakfast Club. It was "so,so,so kind" of us to do that for them. "You work hard, keep it up" another student advised. The club donated 1,000 water bottles at the beginning of the school year so students could stay hydrated despite the absence of water fountains due to Covid-19.
