Dr. Jeremy A. Smith, Director Archives of Appalachia ETSU

Tuesday, September 28, 2021

Dr. Jeremy A. Smith, Director of the Archives of Appalachia at ETSU, will be speaking on the purpose and mission of the center for Appalachian Studies and Services. The mission of the Archives of Appalachia is to support original scholarship, education, and creativity by collecting, preserving, and making accessible materials of enduring value that document the history and culture of southern Appalachia and of East Tennessee State University. The Archives of Appalachia is a repository for memories — the written words, images, and sounds that document life in southern Appalachia. The department stewards nearly two miles of rare manuscripts, 250,000 photographs, 90,000 audio and moving image recordings, and 14,000 books. Nearly 2,000 patrons visit the Archives in person each year, and 65,000 more from over 50 countries engage with our holdings online.

Dr. Smith became the fifth Director of the Archives of Appalachia in 2018. He brings a wealth of experience to ETSU and has earned the following degrees:

PhD, Musicology, Duke University, 2008

MA, Musicology, Duke University, 2005

MA, Theology, Regent University, 2003

BM, Music Theory and Composition, University of South Carolina Honors College, 2000
