January 15, 2024: Dr. Kaitlyn Casulli, Assistant Professor of Food Science & Technology

Dr. Kaitlyn Casulli is an Assistant Professor and Extension Process Specialist at University of Georgia with expertise in microbial inactivation and risk modeling. Prior to joining UGA in January 2022, Kaitlyn was a doctoral fellow at Michigan State University. Her research program broadly encompasses developing mathematical models for process validation. Her extension activities have included assisting companies with process validation and delivering workshops to industry and government learners on topics such as developing food safety plans and starting a new brewery. She currently leads a newly formed USDA-funded center, the Value-addition Institute for Business Expansion, with the goal of supporting small business development in rural Georgia. When not at work, she enjoys visiting breweries with her dog, Porter.
