PROGRAM LAST WEEK by John Lindsay

“Quality of life is one reason Aiken was recently named “best small city in the South” by Southern Living magazine and Jessica Campbell, the City of Aiken’s Parks and Recreation Director, told Aiken Rotarians the city’s Parks and Recreation program is a vital part of making Aiken a special place. With 56 employees and a four million dollar annual budget, the department’s mission is to provide green space, recreation and play opportunities for people of all ages and abilities.

Responsible for maintaining and enhancing 25 facilities across the city, Campbell’s department organizes and directs 10 programs ranging from the “Senior Extravaganza” for seniors to “Story Time” for youngsters. Enjoy “Christmas in Hopelands”???: Thanks Parks and Rec. Have children or grand kids playing soccer, baseball, volleyball and more???: Thank Parks and Rec.

And there’s more in the future. Besides continuous improvement of the current programs and facilities, Campbell points to two new projects, Generations Park and the Eustis Senior/Youth Center, as making Aiken the “best small city” to live, work and play. “
