Areas of Greatest Need in Rural Villages

- Clean Water
- Sanitation
- Health
- Leadership

Sanitation,

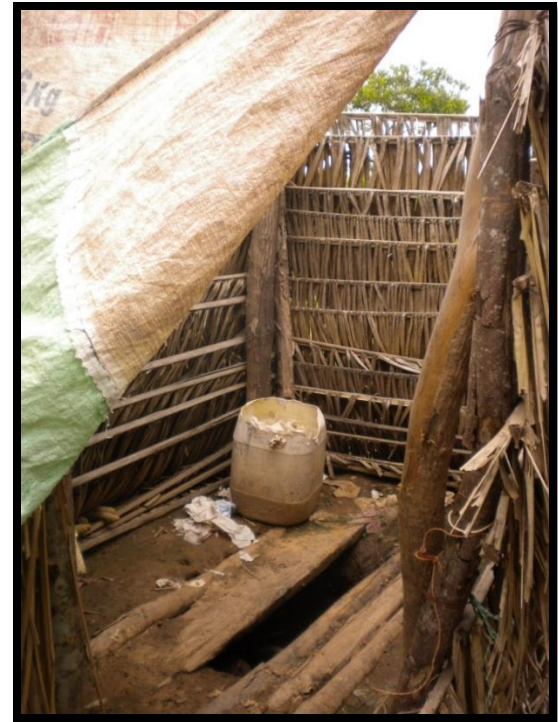

it is not like here everywhere.

According to UNICEF, in developing countries

- 80 percent of all disease results from a combination of poor hygiene, contaminated water and poor sanitation.
- In Bolivia, diarrhea causes 36% of deaths in children under five.
- Studies show that provision of safe water coupled with sanitation facilities can reduce deaths from diarrhea and other water-related illnesses by 65% and overall childhood mortality by 55%.

Ecological Composting Latrine

Changing Health, Sanitation, Protecting Water Systems and Giving Dignity

Most folks in rural Bolivian use pit latrines, a hole dug in the ground. During the rainy season they flood and kids will tell you these are the scariest place in their village because of the rodents that live there or the fear of the boards breaking.

Sugar cane fields are the other option. Women get up at 4am to go to the fields just to have a little privacy.

- These are composting latrines. They decrease disease by an incredible rate, keep the environment safe and give dignity .

Eco Composting Toilet

Let's Construct an Ecological Composting Latrine

Before and After

Before and After

The first to empty a chamber in a community is the bravest.

Once a chamber is full, the family switches their toilet to the second chamber. While the second chamber is filling, the first is composting so that when it is ready to switch again, the first can be cleaned out and the process continues. It is just clean rich dirt .
