Rotary Book Club... a Way to Connect with Fellow Members

Book Club Members and Rotary Members,

It was a magical night on our deck, with the fire pit glowing as we discussed our latest book, the Telling Room: A Tale of Love, Betrayal, Revenge and the World's Greatest Piece of Cheese by Michael Paterniti, recommended by our very own, cheese lady, Annie Foos. She complimented our reading with a tray of Spanish and Portuguese cheeses from Zingerman's from Ann Arbor, MI, because it was mentioned in the book. Thank you Annie!!

My husband, Pat, brought Spanish Wines to compliment the delicious cheeses, bread, crackers, nuts, and butter beans.

Book clubs are a little about the books we read and more about the sharing of our lives, experiences, and opinions among people we respect and value because they are fellow Rotarians. Rotary is more than a weekly meeting; it's bonding with others who help us when we need a little help and walk the journey of life with us.

It creates lifelong friendships and finds ways to entertain us along the way. It is not work as much as it is service at multiple levels.

It's inspirational when we hear of a fellow Rotarian, Chuck Watts has been a member for 40 years and recently became a Major Donor.

Our next book is from a local person, Teri Rizvi, executive director of strategic communications at the University of Dayton and founder of the Erma Bombeck Writer's Workshop in 2000. Teri wrote the book One Heart with Courage about her own experiences in a collection of essays and stories. Our hope that one of the stories speaks to us personally and we can bring our own experiences to the discussion table.

It was so much fun meeting at a home that John Lyman volunteered to host us for our next meeting on Tuesday, December 13, 2022, 6:30-8:00PM. Details will follow closer to the meeting.

If you have question or would like to join the book club please contact Susan Hayes.

Joe Fig: Art About Art

An admirer of art production and viewing, Fig (American, born 1968) is an author and artist who explores artists' studios and museum galleries as sources of inspiration and the subjects of his art. From the paint-splattered barn of Jackson Pollock to the minimalist studio of Barnett Newman, Fig explores the process of making art, the working lives of artists, and the spaces where they work, what has been called the "preprovenance" of art. He recreates or imagines the artists at work, comparing the studios with the pristine museum environments where works are shown. His work is enjoyable on many levels, both serious and playful, all made in painstaking realism on a diminutive scale.

American Myth & Memory: David Levinthal Photographs

American Myth & Memory probes the recesses of America's collective memory and imagination. Through his use of toys, Levinthal looks at the quintessential American subjects and mass media's role in mythologizing familiar cultural touchstones. Levinthal spent his childhood engaging with classic American myths and legends through televised Westerns and plastic playthings and his art has never strayed far from these formative influences: he has dedicated his 40-year career photographing toys in meaningful and playful vignettes that challenge our perceptions of photographic authenticity. Through his color photographs, Levinthal's work is populated with cowboys and cavalry, Barbie dolls and baseball figurines. Although the photographs project an illusion of innocence, Levinthal's toys are stand-ins for society. They allow him a way to explore what it means to be strong, beautiful, masculine, feminine and, ultimately, American.
