ROTARY PROJECT: TURNING WINE BOTTLES BACK INTO SAND

Though glass is derived from a naturally occurring material, once that substance is transformed into bottles, it is hardly a boon to the environment. Each year in the U.S., people throw away some 8 million tons of glass, a bulky part of landfills that can last ages. The Environmental Protection Agency reports that only about a third of glass that Americans buy gets recycled. The Rotary Club of Chelan, Washington, found an opportunity to mine some of that glass out of the waste stream. The club partnered with local agencies and businesses to buy a glass pulverizing machine which turns used bottles and broken glass back into sand that can be used in gardening, landscaping, playgrounds, and biological water filter projects.
