JACK'S ROTARY MOMENT

Jack told us the Purple Pinkie Project (PPP) story:

Why is it called Purple Pinkie? When a child is vaccinated, a purple dye is put on their little finger so that other Polio Plus workers will know that this child has been given the two drops of polio vaccine.

The PPP was started by a Rotary Club in New England, and has been successfully duplicated by Rotary clubs all over the world, as a child's purple pinkie has become a symbol of Rotary's fight to end polio. So each Purple Pinkie represents another step toward the eradication of polio worldwide.
