Michael Arietti gave his classification talk. He was first a member of our club in 2008 before moving to Great Britain for a few years. He grew up in Connecticut and received his undergraduate degree from Johns Hopkins majoring in international relations. After college, he joined the Peace Corps and spent 2 years in India. He then applied for and was selected as a foreign service officer with the State Department, where he spent 35 years in many different positions and countries until retirement in 2008. His first job was in Iran during the time of the Shah. He went back and forth from working overseas to working at State Department positions in DC. His favorite country position was Australia. He served in Stockholm, Sweden, was the Deputy Chief of Mission in Zambia (Former Northern Rhodesia), served in Geneva, Switzerland, was loaned out to the World Wildlife Fund where he worked on forest conservation, was the Director for West African Issues in DC mainly working on Liberia during its civil war, and then culminated his career as Ambassador of Rwanda from 2005-2008. The State Department often asks retired foreign service officers to come back to serve for short stints. He will be doing this soon for 3 months in Gambia, but will remain a member of our club through this period.
