- Use multi-factor authentication (MFA) wherever possible. Passkeys or FIDO-certified hardware keys (such as Yubikeys) are the best, push notification systems such as Microsoft's Authenticator are next best (if available), app-based one-time codes are next after that, followed by text message-based one-time codes. Any multi-factor system is better than none.

The majority of personal cyber-defense boils down to just a handful of practices and the discipline to maintain them.

Account Protection:

- Use strong and unique credentials. Lock your devices with unique passcodes and use a password manager (but not your web browser) to store strong and unique credentials that you don't have to memorize for every account. If you must use a password, use a passphrase.

- Avoid public Wi-Fi. Instead, use a hotspot. If you must use public Wi-Fi, employ a reputable virtual private network (VPN) such as Nord VPN and avoid accessing private information while connected.

"Wrap up one rose," he told the florist.

"Only one?" the florist asked.

"Just one," the customer replied. "I'm a man of few words."
