The Cowford Archaeological Research Society is a Jacksonville, Florida based non-profit, tax-exempt (501(c)(3)) group founded by professional archaeologists and concerned citizens to investigate and preserve archaeological and historical properties. All members have a mutual interest in learning about and preserving our non-renewable cultural resources. Membership is open to volunteers with similar interests. We will strive to provide a productive and educational environment for our community's youth to make an impact and perhaps introduce them to a new life changing passion.

The mission of the Cowford Archaeological Society is to advance knowledge of the history & prehistory of northeast Florida through systematic exploration of our non-renewable cultural resources. The ultimate goal is to understand the roles of the individual sites in the larger picture of the area's (pre) history. This will be completed through field & laboratory research, dissemination of the results to the public and ultimately, preservation of the resources. Our Code of Ethics ensures that our fieldwork and research will be completed to the highest professional standards.

About our Speaker: George Burns

George R. Burns is Vice President and Principal Investigator. Mr. Burns earned a Masters Degree in Anthropology from Colorado State University in 1981 and has over 15 years of experience in the field and laboratory, spanning several western and Rocky Mountain states. He has worked as lead archaeologist in field survey and report preparation of projects ranging from access roads and 40 acre well pads to 100+ mile pipelines. He has participated in, directed and prepared research reports for subsurface investigations ranging from small test pits to full excavation of aboriginal and historic structures. Using his archaeological background as a springboard, he was employed for a time as a Quality Assurance Inspector, serving as liaison between the Bureau of Land Management and a contractor during construction of large oil gathering systems.

About our Speaker: Dean Sais

Dean M. Sais is the President of CARS as well as Project Manager / Field Director. He has over 25 years of experience in archaeological fieldwork spanning numerous eastern and southeastern states. He has worked for Cultural Resource Management companies, participating in and directing projects ranging from surveys to full excavations. He participated in the evaluation of site significance and made recommendations for their inclusions to the NRHP. Post fieldwork duties included artifact identification and cataloging and report preparation.
