What You Missed ...

By Sara Hickey on Sunday, July 10, 2022

Last week, we heard from two Mandela Washington fellows who are completing leadership skills enhancement training at the University of Delaware. Chigozie Okonkwo is an Education Program Officer for the African Union Commission, working to solve the problem of out-of-school children in Nigeria. He is trying to empower the over 18 million children and their families to participate in school instead of child labor. He raises funds for supplies and helps educate families on the importance of education.

Tawo Msowoya is a feminist and women's rights advocate for the Southern African Development Community bringing young women together to nurture sisterhood and raise consciousness around issues that are similar to all women in Malawi. She gave some interesting facts about her home country of Malawi and boasted that it is home to the first female President in Southern Africa. See this week's recording for their interesting stories.
