competitors in the UNCA Formula design competition was organized to conceive, design, fabricate, develop, and test a racing automobile. The UNC Asheville team was organized to build a racing automobile in 2023. Current team members include Miranda Holden, and Nadia Fourie. The team spends personal time as opposed to doing classwork on design and manufacturing, but also receives funding to compete again in 2025 and receive recognition from the University. In addition to providing support to the community for insights from industry, the team is necessary for students to be engineering students. Interested students, including high school students,
