Robin McKay's Architecture Talk

AFTER training at the new University of NSW Robin McKay met and married Wendy (nee Lamrock), then travelled and worked overseas before returning to Australia in 1966. He designed their new unconventional "open plan" and environmentally super-sensitive house in River Road, Emu Plains, near the home of the artists Gerald and Margo Lewers. (He has anecdotes to share about being called on by Margo for assistance.)

In 1969 Robin set up practice in Penrith, restoring and occupying the old 1896 "Coach House". For the next 50 years a steady flow of projects ensued including a full range of commercial, industrial, institutional, educational (from pre-school to university), medical, civic, hospitality and, yes, even residential buildings. He was awarded an Order of Australia Medal in 2009 for "a significant contribution to the architecture of the Nepean area," together with much community involvement.

In 2019 he decided to relinquish formal registration as an architect and still remains registered now as a "non-practising architect".
